Citizen Contention and Campus Calm: The Paradox of Chinese Civil Society

Perry, Elizabeth

Starting Page: 211

"Contrary to conventional predictions, the growth of protest and civil society in contemporary China seems more conducive to the resilience of authoritarianism than to imminent democratization."

History's Unfinished Business in East Asia

Mitter, Rana

Starting Page: 218

"China . . . is determined that it will have greater influence than it enjoys at present, and it will use historical justifications to make its case." First in a series on resurgent nationalism around the world.

How Real Are Myanmar's Reforms?

Fink, Christina

Starting Page: 224

"Full democratization may not be achieved in the near future, but given that the reform process was initiated by the regime, Myanmar has come a long way."

The Roots of China's Ethnic Conflicts

Sun, Yan

Starting Page: 231

"A better understanding of the flaws in China's ethnic policy would help ease the vicious cycle of ever more sticks and carrots in dealing with sensitive regions."

Mongolia Searches for Breathing Room

Narangoa, Li

"Mongolian leaders have decided the nation must find ways to take care of itself, rather than rely on its neighbors."

Perspective: China's Bullying No Match for US Pacific Power

Cumings, Bruce

Starting Page: 245

Beijing's grabs for puny islands have alarmed and alienated smaller countries in the region. But Washington doesn't need to "pivot" to Asia—it's been in charge there for decades.

Books: Forbidden Memories of 1989

Merkel-Hess, Kate

Starting Page: 252

New books by Evan Osnos and Louisa Lim show the profound dissonance between official amnesia and personal recollections of the Tiananmen tragedy.
